

Supplemental file 2: Alterations made to the Igbo Roland Morris Disability Questionnaire (Igbo-RMDQ) during cross-cultural adaptation

Questionnaire instructions
Original RMDQ	English equivalent of the Igbo-RMDQ
When your back hurts, you may find it difficult to do some of the things you normally do. This list contains some sentences that people have used to describe themselves when they have back pain. When you read them, you may find that some stand out because they describe you today. As you read the list, think of yourself today. When you read a sentence that describes you today, put a tick against it. If the sentence does not describe you, then leave the space blank and go on to the next one. Remember, only tick the sentence if you are sure that it describes you today.	Whenever your back is hurting you, you may realise that some things you used to do may become difficult. The statements that are written here are the ways people have described themselves when they are having waist pain (or back pain). When you read them or when someone reads them to you, you may see that some of them describe you today. When you are reading these or someone is reading them to you, think of yourself today. When you read or someone reads the statement that describes you today, mark the statement or tell the person that read it to you to mark that statement. If a statement does not describe you, leave that statement and move on to the next one. Remember to mark only the statements that you know describe you today.

Coloured text are modifications. Changes in the instructions gave the option of interviewer-administration of the Igbo-RMDQ. The expert review committee introduced two extra clauses in the instruction: 'or when someone reads them to you' and 'or tell the person that read it to you to mark your statement' to give the option of interviewer-administration.

* During pre-testing of Igbo-RMDQ, the Igbo word for 'waist pain' was how participants understood pain in the lower back. Literal Igbo translation of back pain was understood as either upper back pain or pain of the entire back. Therefore 'back pain or back' and 'waist pain or waist' were used in the items but 'waist pain or waist' was read out to this specific low back pain population.

Clinicians/researchers using the measure in a general back pain population could use 'back/back pain or waist/waist pain' in the relevant items as shown above. Used together, the Igbo equivalents of 'back/back pain and waist/waist pain' reflect the general back pain population. 'Waist pain'/'waist' should be used when investigating only a low back pain population.

In item 1, 'nearly all the time' was used to better reflect the original item as the same Igbo phrase means 'many times' or 'most of the time'.

Item 5 was translated differently: 'I hold onto something...' and 'I hold onto a stick...' because there is no Igbo word for 'handrail'. Through consensus of all translators, 'I hold onto the step hand...' was used as the Igbo equivalent means the same thing as the original item.

For item 16, a new phrase 'my foot wear' was used by the expert review team to better reflect the social context of rural Nigeria where many people do not wear socks.

For item 23, a new phrase 'or uphill' was added to the original item to reflect rural Nigeria where many dwellers lived in bungalows with hilly terrains.

Through consensus of all translators and the review team, 'I lie down' was used in place of 'I stay in bed' in item 24, as some rural Nigerian dwellers do not lie on beds.
